DRESS CODE

There are always a lot of questions about appropriate attire on the beach as well as in the Big Room. One-piece swimsuits or two? Spaghetti straps and halter-tops or granny dresses? What is going on? It has become pretty clear that some youth ministries have different standards than others, and then some of them have a hard time laying down the "dress code law". Students and parents, the reason for these parameters is so that we will not have to disrupt the focus of camp. It is up to you to keep the camp focused, and this is important. You may or may not agree, but we want to keep camp with as little distractions as possible. We do not expect to see any navels during the session and two-piece swimsuits are definitely one piece too many! We do understand that not all one-pieces are quite modest enough, so error on the conservative side of the line. We also don't really like seeing t-shirts with the wrong kind of message, so you may want to pass that along as well. In general, the dress code is: be smart, be prudent, and be respectful.
